UMass RNs under attack despite hospital’s huge surplus

Proposed contract would decimate nursing care at key trauma center

At the onset of negotiations, the MNA members at the University Campus of UMass Medical Center in Worcester could see the writing on the wall: hospital management—via some newly-hired, upper-level personnel—was set on decimating the contract.

How? By putting forth a set of shameful contract takeaways, as well as by perpetuating a corporate culture that allows managers to harass nurses who are union activists.

“The contract proposals that management has handed across the table so far are shameful,” said Kathie Logan, an RN and the chairperson of the MNA bargaining unit at UMass. “The message being sent as a result is that nurses are a non-essential resource at the University Campus.”

The contract

Management’s most recent contract proposals have included:

• A reduction in personal days
• The elimination of three holidays
• A new distinction that makes anyone working less than 32 hours per week a part-time employee, which means they will be forced to pay a higher percentage of their medical coverage
• Elimination of the program that allows nurses to donate sick time to co-workers in need

Nurses deliver hospital industry $1 billion bill to legislators

Dramatizes industry’s ample resources to pay for safe staffing

In the wake of official reports showing the hospital industry reaped enormous profits in 2005 totaling nearly $1 billion, nurses were at the State House on Feb. 16 to hand deliver an oversized (11 by 22 inch) mock up of a “Hospital Industry Billion Dollar Bill” to the office of every state legislator.

The delivery coincided with a major grass roots push by nurses and consumers who are promoting legislation, H.2663, that would require all acute care hospitals in the state to provide a safe limit on the number of patients each nurse is assigned at one time.

The event highlighted the fact that the hospital industry can easily afford the investment needed to improve the safety of patient care in Massachusetts hospitals.

Cape Cod Hospital RNs ratify three-year contract

The registered nurses represented by the MNA at Cape Cod Hospital recently ratified a new three-year contract that includes a number of important patient safety protections, including:

• A written commitment by the hospital to adhere to specific core RN staffing levels in all areas of the hospital.
• The formation of a union-management staffing committee to evaluate triggers (patients requiring telemetry monitoring, chemotherapy drips, etc.) that would call for improvements in the core staffing levels on certain floors.
• Language requiring balanced admissions of patients to avoid overloading specific floors based on available staff, illness level of patients and skills of staff on the floor.
• A guaranteed right of every nurse to refuse to work any mandatory overtime if he or she feels too fatigued or ill to provide safe patient care.
In addition, the pact includes pay hikes that increase nurses’ salaries by 20 percent to 25 percent over the life of the agreement depending on the nurse’s years of experience. It also includes a provision that will prevent the layoff of 60 nurses who work under a special weekend incentive plan that paid the nurses a higher salary and granted them full insurance benefits for 24 hours of work. The hospital had threatened to terminate the program and layoff the nurses as of April 1, 2006. The new contract postpones the elimination of the special weekend benefit for a year, and by the time the program is eliminated, nurses will be allowed to move several steps up the salary scale, plus be paid a $5 per hour weekend shift differential to make them as close

Representatives from 30 labor and community groups have joined 50 other organizations committed to support passage of the health care amendment that would guarantee every Massachusetts resident access to affordable coverage for medically necessary health and mental health care services. The amendment will be on the agenda of the constitutional convention scheduled to meet again on May 10.

Amendment part of ‘real reform’

The health care constitutional amendment is receiving growing support as more and more groups see it as an essential foundation for real reform. On Jan. 25 representatives from 30 labor and community groups state-wide met at the MNA headquarters in Canton with members of the campaign to discuss an action plan. The groups agreed that getting the amendment on the ballot is critical for achieving comprehensive health care coverage for every Massachusetts resident that is affordable and fair. The amendment needs 50 votes at the next constitutional convention to qualify for the November ballot.

“While many of our member organizations support immediate action on some of the health care reforms that the governor and Legislature are considering, the constitutional amendment is an opportunity to move towards a real solution to the health care crisis in Massachusetts,” said Rand Wilson, co-chair of Justice’s Health Care Action Committee. “Passing the amendment will ‘lock-in’ progress made by this Legislature and build momentum to finish the job.”

The constitutional amendment would require the state to guarantee every Massachusetts resident access to affordable coverage for medically necessary health and mental health care services including prescription drugs and devices but the amendment does not restrict the Legislature on how to provide that access. Sent to legislators as a ballot petition by 71,385 registered voters in July 2004, the amendment received overwhelming preliminary approval with 153 votes, far surpassing the required 50. The amendment must now receive a second “yes” vote by 50 legislators at the upcoming constitutional convention in May, and then go to voters in November 2006 for final ratification. Once the laws are enacted to ensure universal coverage, proposed plans will go to voters for their approval.

Constitutional convention

A constitutional convention is a joint meeting of the state House of Representatives and the state Senate to consider only amendments to the state Constitution.

“The amendment will assure two steps forward stays two steps forward. Unfortunately we’ve seen the incremental efforts to address and improve health coverage eroded repeatedly to the detriment of those most in need.’”

President’s column

Patient safety should not be negotiable

By Beth Piknick
MNA President

The headline from my column this month—“Patient safety should not be negotiable”—was not chosen by me, but is a reprint of a headline appearing above an editorial in the Register, a weekly newspaper on Cape Cod, which is where I live and work. The editorial was responding to a very public struggle between the nurses and management of Cape Cod Hospital over a growing crisis in nurse staffing at the facility.

The MNA nurses at my hospital have been attempting to convince the hospital to make a contractual commitment to improve RN-to-patient ratios at the hospital in response to more than 100 unsafe staffing reports, more than 140 deliberately unfilled nursing positions, a recent increase in patient assignments and the planned layoff of more than 60 nurses who work weekend shifts.

While the Cape Cod nurses ended up winning that battle, forcing the hospital to capitulate and agree to adhere to written staffing ratios (though not as good as the those in H.2663), the paper’s opinion I believe was the correct one.

It read: “The negotiating strategy doesn’t serve anyone’s interest, least of all the public’s. What it does, however, is point out the need for agreed upon staffing levels that are easily verifiable by the public.”

“Systematically improving the quality of care is one way to do this,” the editorial continued. “There are two ways to do this: One is through contract negotiations; the other is through the legislative process. Both are currently ongoing. A bill currently in committee (H.2663) and supported by five Cape Cod legislators calls for specific nurse-to-patient ratios. The ratios vary, depending on the needs of the units. The ratios, as regards general floor coverage, is one to four, which is what Cape Cod Hospital claims to have and what the union says it aims to have.

“Legislation such as this is needed if we are to take the health and safety of our loved ones and ourselves off the bargaining table.”

Believe me, the nurses at Cape Cod Hospital are proud of their stand for patient care and the public’s response to our call for their support was overwhelming. The hospital did agree to adhere to specific staffing levels, but the reality is that the enforcement of those ratios depends on the hospital’s good faith efforts to honor the agreement, and the union’s ability to file grievances and win arbitrations to hold their feet to the fire. While it is important to do just that, nurses and the public shouldn’t have to jump through these hoops to get hospital managers to act responsibly.

As I write this, Mercy Medical Center in Springfield is also trying to deal with terrible staffing conditions through contract language, as are other MNA hospitals. Absent a law, this is what we have to do at many facilities to garner some level of protection. But like the paper says, there is another way, a better way. Let’s pass H.2663 and take safe staffing off the contract table. As the headline reads: patient safety should not be negotiable.

Unit 7 advocates, family members win fight to save the Fernald Center

On Feb. 8, a federal judge ordered the state of Massachusetts to indefinitely suspend the transfer of mentally retarded residents from the Fernald Development Center in Waltham—resulting in an jubilant victory for family members, advocates and Unit 7 members who fought for almost three years to block Gov. Mitt Romney’s attempts to close Fernald and its sister facilities across the state.

Judge Joseph L. Tauro—who implemented a ground-breaking court order in 1993 that protected the rights of the mentally retarded—appointed U.S. Attorney Michael J. Sullivan to examine whether the state’s Department of Mental Retardation (DMR) had violated the rights of the 43 residents who were transferred out of Fernald since 2003.

On Jan. 30, in a large courtroom on the third floor of the Suffolk County Courthouse in Boston, 600 people sat face-to-face in front of Judge Tauro and his panel. They included Unit 7 advocates, family members and Unit 7 employees.

The state had argued that, without a trial, the 600 people—mostly family members, advocates and nurses—had no chance of winning such a complex lawsuit.

But to the surprise of everyone, and including the government’s lawyers, Judge Tauro, who presided over a class-action lawsuit filed in 1972, ordered dramatic improvements in conditions at six institutions, including Fernald, before he closed the case in 1993 in the belief that the institutions had become models. However, he urged plaintiffs to come to him for help if subsequent violations were observed—a practice that ultimately allowed advocates for the retarded to secure this most recent victory.

According to a Boston Globe report, “State officials say all the transfers have been voluntary, but Fernald supporters contend that at least some of the former residents now get lower quality care, in violation of Tauro’s historic court order.”

The ruling was celebrated by Fernald residents, family members and Unit 7 employees who have been arguing that the Fernald campus is the best place for the dwindling number of residents, “many of whom have IQs under 25 and who have lived at the facility for decades.”

Unit 7 members at Fernald and members of the Massachusetts Coalition of Families and Advocates For the Retarded (COFAR) had been lobbying since April 2003 against the governor’s plans to close the state facilities, which provides state-of-the-art care for the retarded. COFAR had argued that, given a continuing lack of adequate funding and oversight of community-based care in Massachusetts, the proposed state facility shutdowns would place the well-being, and even the lives, of the state’s retarded citizens at risk.

“Bravo to the Fernald families and advocates,” said Colleen Lutkevich, the director of Massachusetts COFAR, after Tauro’s court order was announced. “Judge Tauro’s appointment of U.S. Attorney Michael Sullivan to serve as court monitor to ‘investigate as to whether past and prospective transfer processes employed by DMR comply with federal law, state regulations, as well as the orders of this court’ is a win for everyone who is concerned for the mentally retarded. And we would like to offer our sincere congratulations and gratitude to everyone who helped in this effort.”

Pending the conclusion of Sullivan’s inquiry, and his report to the court, all transfers from Fernald to other ICF/MRs and community residences will be discontinued.

To view the legal battle in its entirety, you should follow the links at www.cofar.org. The website includes a video of Judge Tauro’s lament that the state has not expanded the dollars awarded to the mentally retarded to provide the living conditions they need. Since Judge Tauro announced the case, Sullivan has observed that the state of Massachusetts has failed to provide these dollars.

COFAR is also talking about expanding the rights of the rights of the 43 residents who were transferred out of Fernald since 2003.
Another study makes business case for increasing RN staffing in hospitals

Better RN ratios save thousands of lives and millions of dollars

A major study just published in the January/February 2006 issue of the journal Health Affairs shows:

- An “unequivocal business case” can be made for increasing the level of registered nurse staffing in hospitals—a move that could pay for itself in fewer patient deaths, shorter hospital stays, and decreased rates of costly medical complications. The study was based on data from 800 acute care hospitals across the country.
- The study found that if hospitals invested in increased RN staffing at levels comparable to the top 25 percent of the nation’s hospitals, more than 6,700 patient deaths and 4.1 million days of hospital inpatient care could be avoided, with millions of dollars saved each year.
- The Health Affairs report comes just months after the journal Medical Care found minimum RN staffing levels more cost-effective than common hospital practices such as clot-busting medications for heart attack and stroke, and cancer screenings.
- “From a patient’s perspective…using standard measures of value, the additional costs to increase nurse staffing appear justified,” say the study’s authors.
- The authors of the new Health Affairs study acknowledge that it fails to account for additional significant cost savings—identified in a number of other studies—that might be realized from reductions in RN turnover and from the avoidance of additional in-stay complications.
- In addition to the business case for increased RN staffing levels, the Massachusetts hospital industry made nearly $1 billion in profits in 2005 and has $500 million in hospital expansion going on now.
Bill on safe patient handling gets favorable vote from public health committee

If implemented, H. 2662 will protect thousands of nurses from debilitating back injuries

On March 1, the Joint Committee on Public Health voted favorably on H.2662, An Act Relating to Safe Patient Handling in Certain Health Care Facilities.

The bill, which was filed by the MNA and sponsored by Reps. Jennifer Callahan (D-Sutton), would require hospitals to provide a system to assist nurses with safe patient handling in order to avoid injury.

Skeletal injuries have costly implications for hospitals, health care providers and insurers while driving nurses away from the bedside. While patient safety is a primary concern at all facilities, protecting nurses also is paramount.

In addition to the personal cost to the injured worker, the facility costs range from $50,000 to $300,000 for each worker’s return to work. The cost of missed work days for all nurses ranges from $1.3 billion to $2.5 billion annually.

“The MNA recognized the need for this legislation and it acted quickly to draft and file an outstanding bill—one that would have a powerful, lasting effect on the lives of the state’s nurses,” said Beth Piknick, RN and president of the MNA. “We’re thrilled to know that the Joint Committee on Public Health has recognized this need as well and that H.2662 is now one step closer to becoming a law.”

Dangers of unsafe lifting practices

Nursing is the highest risk occupation in the United States with respect to lifting and handling-related injuries. It is the profession most associated with work-related musculoskeletal disorders and back injuries. Injury data show that nearly 12 out of 100 nurses in hospitals and 17.3 out of 100 nurses working in nursing homes report work-related musculoskeletal injuries, including back injuries, which is about double the rate for all other industries combined.

Nurses, nursing assistants, orderlies and attendants are at an increased risk for back injuries because of the amount of heavy lifting associated with their occupation. On average, a nurse will lift 20 patients into bed and transfer five to 10 patients from a bed to a chair during a typical shift (Allen, S. & Wilder, K., 1996; Occupational Health & Safety). Patients typically weigh in excess of 100 pounds, which greatly surpasses the weight that is considered safe to lift without assistance.

Greater than one-third of back injuries among nurses are attributed to the handling of patients and the frequency with which nurses are required to manually move patients. “Nurses lift, move and turn patients who might easily weigh 250 pounds or more on an hourly basis, and most would consider a 100-pound patient to be ‘light,’” said Piknick, who became an advocate for safe patient handling legislation after experiencing a debilitating back injury that resulted from moving patients.

“But despite the fact that other industries follow lifting regulations to the letter, the nursing industry has been overlooked. We’re going to change that,” Piknick added. “H.2662 is the key to protecting nurses and to reducing the system-wide costs that are spent on treating nurses who are debilitated by otherwise preventable muscular skeletal injuries.”

H.2662: the specifics

H.2662 calls for an approach that would require all health care facilities in the state to develop and implement a health care worker back injury prevention plan to protect nurses and other caregivers, as well as patients, from injury. The plan would mandate the following:

- A systematic process in each facility for addressing ergonomics, recognizing occupational health and safety hazards, and preventing injuries specific in each health care facility.
- Needs assessment by facilities of patients’ lift and transfer requirements and resulting handling, lift and equipment needs.
- Specialized training of health care workers and lift team members by qualified personnel, with demonstration of proficiency in handling techniques and use of handling equipment.
- Protection of workers against disciplinary action for refusal to lift or handle patients due to concerns about patient and worker safety.

“As an ICU nurse, I suffered a career-altering back injury,” said Piknick. “Two decades of lifting, transferring and moving patients resulted in major spinal fusion surgery to repair three discs in my back. The simple love of my profession was not enough to allow me to continue the type of bedside nursing I used to do. But the passage of H.2662 will prevent this from happening to any other nurses in Massachusetts.”

Honor your peers with a nomination for 2006 MNA awards

One of the greatest honors one can achieve is the recognition of one’s peers. In this fast-changing health care system in which nurses strive daily to carry out their duties to their patients, there is very little time for them to acknowledge their own professional accomplishments and those of their peers.

The MNA awards are established by the membership with the approval of the MNA Board of Directors. They offer all members an opportunity to recognize nurses who, by their commitment and outstanding achievements, have honored us all. These are often nurses and other individuals who accomplish extraordinary things and who challenge us all to achieve excellence.

Elaine Cooney Labor Relations Award: Recognizes a Labor Relations Program member who has made a significant contribution to the professional, economic and general welfare of nursing.

Judith Shindul Rothschild Leadership Award: Recognizes a member and nurse leader who speaks with a strong voice for the nursing community.

MNA Advocate for Nursing Award: Recognizes the contributions of an individual—who is not a nurse—to nurses and the nursing profession.

MNA Human Needs Service Award: Recognizes an individual who has performed outstanding services based on human need with respect for human dignity, unrestricted by consideration of nationality, race, creed, color or status.

MNA Image of the Professional Nurse Award: Recognizes a member who demonstrates outstanding leadership in enhancing the image of the professional nurse in the community.

MNA Nursing Education Award: Recognizes a nurse educator who has made significant contributions to professional nursing education, continuing education and/or staff development.

MNA Excellence in Nursing Practice Award: Recognizes a member who is a role model by contributing innovative, progressive ideas that serve to improve and enhance clinical nursing practice, including precepting students or new staff nurses.

MNA Research Award: Recognizes a member or group of members who have effectively conducted or utilized research in their practices.

Kathryn McGinn Cutler Advocate for Health & Safety Award: This award recognizes an individual or group that has performed outstanding service for the betterment of health and safety for the protection of nurses and other health care workers.

Frank M. Hynes Award: This award recognizes a deserving freshman state legislator or municipal official who has clearly demonstrated exceptional contributions to nursing and health care.

MNA Director of Nursing Award: This award recognizes a senior state or federal legislator who has clearly demonstrated exceptional contributions to nursing and health care.

Leaders in American labor history: a two-part series

The following is the second part of a very selective list of some of the key labor leaders in American history. They have varied backgrounds and represent diverse workers, industries and workplaces but they all shared a burning desire and life-long commitment to activism, equality, and the rights and responsibilities of workers—as well as a belief in the dignity of all workers.

Often they were controversial figures, but they all dedicated their lives to helping working men and women, particularly at great personal sacrifice and expense, to and including their own lives.

They are great examples and inspirations for those who struggle for equality, justice and economic well-being today. Too little is taught in our schools about the rich history and figures of labor history, and the topic is almost never highlighted in the media or celebrated in popular culture. What follows is a meager attempt to address that vacuum.

Cesar Chavez

Cesar Estrada Chavez founded the United Farm Workers (UFW) union. He was born in Arizona in 1927 and became a migrant farmer at the age of 10 along with the rest of his family. He served in the U.S. Navy and, when on leave in California, he sat in a white section of a racially segregated movie theatre and refused to move.

This action fore-shadowed his life-long commitment to civil rights and to working nonviolently for social change. He worked as an organizer for the Latino civil rights group called Community Services Organization, and eventually became its director. He later founded the National Farm Workers Association which became the UFW.

Chavez understood the importance of symbols as he designed the UFW’s black and red flag, explaining that, “A symbol is an important thing. That is why we choose an Aztec eagle. It gives pride. When people see it they know it means dignity.” The eagle had intentionally squared off wing edges so that it would be easier for union members to draw on handmade flags. He attained national prominence in 1965 by launching a strike for California grape-pickers and a national boycott of grapes that lasted five years. By 1975, a Louis Harris poll showed 17 million American adults were honoring the grape boycott. It forced growers and lettuce in following years but also added victory for migrant farm workers in the US.

He continued to use organizing tactics such as hunger strikes to focus attention on migrant workers’ causes. He also protested the use of toxic pesticides and lettuce in following years but also added personal suffering through hunger strikes to those who struggle for equality, justice and economic well-being today. Too little is taught in our schools about the rich history and figures of labor history, and the topic is almost never highlighted in the media or celebrated in popular culture. to whole as possible. “We are very pleased with the agreement and the fact that the hospital has agreed to be more accountable for the provision of safe staffing levels throughout the hospital,” said Marilyn Rouette, RN, chair of the MNA bargaining unit for the nurses. “We also hope the agreement we reached to preserve weekend nurses will work to ensure optimum staffing on the weekend shifts. The test going forward will be to ensure that the commitments made in this contract are upheld so that our patients receive the care they deserve.”

The settlement comes after months of negotiations and an intense public battle between negotiations and an intense public battle between the hospital and the MNA. The nurses and management over dueling views of the staffing conditions at the hospital. The nurses went public with their concerns in late February, after the hospital had renegotiated commitments to include core staffing levels in the agreement; increased the patient assignments of nurses; and announced the layoff of the 60 nurses working in the weekend program.

In response, nurses took out full page ads in the local paper, circulated petitions among the public and began to mobilize for an informational picket. More than 7000 public signatures were gathered in a two-week period, and hundreds of patients called the hospital in support of the nurses.

On March 1, six days before the planned picketing was to begin and a few days before the hospital was to begin the bumping process for the layoff, a marathon negotiating session was held where the agreement was reached. “The ultimate winners in this negotiation were the patients, as the issues on the table in dispute were all about them. And if management honors this agreement, all our patients will receive better care, our nurses will be more satisfied and the hospital will be more successful,” Rouette concluded.

Huerta became involved in a community group supporting farm workers that merged with the AFL-CIO’s Agricultural Workers Organizing Committee (AWOC), where she served as secretary-treasurer. It was during this time that she met Cesar Chavez, and then formed with him the Farm Workers Association, which eventually became the United Farm Workers (UFW).

Huerta served a key role in the early years of farm worker organizing, though she has only recently been given full credit for this. Among other contributions was her work as the coordinator for East Coast efforts in the table grape boycott, 1968-69, which helped to win recognition for the farm workers’ union. She stated, “I think we brought to the world, or the United States anyway, the whole idea of boycotting as a nonviolent tactic. I think we showed the world that nonviolence can work to make social change.”

In the 1970s Huerta headed up the farm workers’ union’s political arm and helped lobby for legislative protections. In 1988,.

Massachusetts Labor for Health Care and the Jobs with Justice Health Care Action Committee are organizing to link union members’ struggles against cost shifting and cuts in essential services to the movement to win an amendment to the State Constitution that would guarantee every Massachusetts resident access to comprehensive and affordable health care.

As a result, a “Health Care Action Week” has been set for Thursday, March 30. The goal on March 30 is to have tens of thousands of workers—joined by many seniors and community activists—sign a postcard to their elected representatives showing support for the health care amendment.

The focus of the postcard action is to keep pressure on our state senators and representatives for a YES vote at the upcoming May 10 Constitutional Convention. The amendment needs at least 50 votes at the Convention in order to be placed on the ballot this November.

[JWJ] is working with organizations throughout the month of March to educate their members about why the constitutional amendment is an opportunity to ensure that every Massachusetts resident has access to affordable and equitably financed health care coverage.

Getting many people to take action on the same day will give the labor movement an opportunity to show its support for universal coverage. It will also increase pressure on employers and government at all levels for immediate action.

Please participate in the March 30 “Health Care Action Day” by working with the “Health Care Action” committee to get as many members of your organization as possible to sign postcards that day.

Participating organizations will receive educational materials and an action kit from Jobs with Justice to inform members about the rationale for the Health Care Constitutional Amendment and background on why the March 30 “Day of Action” is needed. Return the attached form indicating your organization’s interest and expected level of participation as soon as possible to receive timely delivery of the “Health Care Action Day” materials.

A representative from the committee is available to attend your organization’s executive board and/or membership meeting to further explain why participating in “Health Care Action Day” will send a powerful grassroots message to both employers and politicians that health care should be a right for everyone in Massachusetts!

The Massachusetts Board of Registration in Nursing (BORN) is the agency with regulatory and disciplinary authority over nurses in Massachusetts. In January, BORN announced revision of its applications for initial Massachusetts nurse licensure and advanced practice registered nurse authorization. The changes reflect new Criminal History Systems Board (CHSB) regulatory requirements (see below) which went into effect July 1, 2005.

All entities which request CORI (Criminal Offender Record Information) checks, such as BORN, must now obtain additional data to ensure that CORI checks relate to the individual for whom the request is made. Consequently, applications for initial Massachusetts licensure by reciprocity and examination, APN authorization and certification of graduation from a non-U.S. nursing education program were revised by adding all of the identification data noted below, per the new regulations.

The distribution of the revised application forms began in January. To distinguish the revised application forms from those that are currently in use, look for the “Revised 12/15/05” at the bottom of the revised forms. During the period between Jan. 18 and Feb. 28, applications completed on either form were to be processed.

MNA cautions nurses to ensure that they have received the correct form and have completed it properly.

What’s going on?

BORN also announced that starting in February it began posting on the BORN Web site all disciplinary actions taken against nurses.

MNA is concerned that the board’s regulatory approach in general willfully disregards contemporary views of optimal ways to address medical errors and improve patient safety. The BORN continues to be punitive and unsuccessful at addressing the root causes of medical errors and threats to public safety in the commonwealth. Added pressure comes from the astonishing approach of the National Council of State Boards of Nursing (NCSBN), which appears to search for ways to focus on nurse discipline, prosecution, containment, and views nurses through a criminal justice lens. The musical theme from the old television series “Dragnet” was played at the August 2005 NCSBN meeting in Washington, D.C., when the recommended changes to criminal background checks were announced.

NCSBN also has just announced a new first: a national “discipline summit” to be held in July. Two BORN members from each state will be in attendance. Interestingly, at the same time the NCSBN and Massachusetts BORN are legally charged with ensuring competent nursing practice, the NCSBN is opening the floodgates to nurses from other countries for whom it will be difficult—if not impossible—to perform accurate criminal background checks despite these new regulations.

In their own words (Jan. 24, 2006):

CHICAGO—The National Council of State Boards of Nursing (NCSBN), will expand the number of sites that offer the NCLEX examinations abroad for domestic nurse licensure purposes. NCSBN’s Board of Directors affirmed the decision at its December 2005 meeting upon recommendations from the NCSBN Examination Committee.

The current international sites for NCLEX examinations in London, England; Seoul, South Korea; and Hong Kong have been operational since January 2005. It is planned that the new sites will begin to offer the exam sometime in the next year. The new testing sites will be located in Australia, India, Japan, Mexico, Canada, Germany and Taiwan.

This is the equivalent of sending factory operations overseas. The regulatory boards charged with ensuring patient safety are instead acting as handmaidsen to the hospital industry and working to facilitate the import of cheap nursing labor from other countries as their way of addressing the nursing “shortage” (in reality a shortage of nurses willing to work under increasingly difficult conditions).

What you can do to protect yourself

If there is anyone reading this who has not yet obtained personal professional liability insurance (i.e., coverage other than through your employer), through a company such as NSO, please do so now. The cost for almost all RNs is $89 a year. Contact MNA for information on obtaining coverage.

MNA continues to hear about or observe disciplinary actions against nurses who become, frequently through no fault of their own, involved in a complaint to the Massachusetts Department of Public Health (DPH) or to the Massachusetts BORN. A frequent scenario involves a complaint filed to the DPH by a nurse’s supervisor, a patient, a visitor or a colleague. A DPH investigation ensures, and whether or not a system problem is the basis for the error or problem, complaints against nurses will almost certainly be filed with BORN. Resolving a complaint can take months to years to resolve. Liability insurance will cover the cost of legal counsel and will provide the necessary expertise in getting the complaint resolved more quickly and more fairly.

For more information on members of the BORN and this policy, contact Mary Crotty, RN, MBA, JD, at MNA at 781-830-5743.

Hospitals spend millions on ads but deny safe nursing care

The Boston Globe recently reported on a health care industry advertising blitz that has hospitals in Massachusetts bombarding consumers with radio, television, print and billboard advertising. The goal? To lure patients to their facilities while, at the same time, refusing to invest in appropriate staffing to protect the patients they attract with their slick messages and promises.

As the Globe reported, advertising industry experts report that “advertising by hospitals in Boston media jumped to $18.4 million in the first 11 months of 2005, nearly four times the $4.8 million they spent in 2001.”

The MNA has seen similar advertising activity occurring throughout the state, particularly in Worcester where St. Vincent Hospital and UMass Medical Center are spending hundreds of thousands of dollars on competing advertising campaigns to lure patients to their respective emergency departments—while the nurses at both these facilities report that these EDs are dangerously understaffed.

The industry, which made nearly $1 billion in profits last year, appears to be content to use those resources to hire ad agencies and to pay for media, while neglecting to invest in its most important resource—the nurses who take care of patients.

Nurses report work-related asthma (WRA) in greater numbers than other groups of workers according to the December 2005 issue of the Occupational Lung Disease Bulletin.* In Massachusetts, WRA is a reportable occupational health condition. To receive a copy of the form that is used to report WRA, call the MNA’s health and safety division or contact the Occupational Health Surveillance Program at the Massachusetts Department of Public Health at 617-624-5632.

Cases of WRA are sentinel health events that indicate the need for preventive intervention. Massachusetts and three other states track cases of WRA to identify these sentinel health events and describe the industries, occupations and exposures that need attention. For surveillance purposes, a case of work-related asthma is defined as an individual with a physician’s diagnosis of asthma and an association between the symptoms of asthma and work.

WRA includes two main categories:

1. Pre-existing asthma aggravated by workplace exposures
2. New onset asthma caused by sensitizers or irritants in the workplace

a) Occupational asthma
b) Reactive Airways Dysfunction Syndrome (RADS)

RADS is a subset of new onset asthma distinguished by persistent asthma symptoms caused by a one-time high level irritant exposure. Since 1993, physicians in Massachusetts (and since January 2003, all health care providers) have been required by public health regulations to report confirmed and suspected cases of WRA to the Massachusetts Department of Public Health.

SENSOR staff conduct follow-up telephone interviews with those individuals reported to the Occupational Health Surveillance Program (OHSP) to learn more about the cases, and to confirm the association of asthma with work. Information from cases is used to identify suspect asthma-causing agents and inform intervention activities.

Between January 1993 and December 2004 SENSOR received 1048 case reports of work-related asthma (WRA). Interventions were completed with 594 cases (57 percent), of which 578 cases met the criteria for WRA. Individuals with WRA were predominantly female (62 percent) and white (81 percent); seven percent (n=38) were of Hispanic origin. The vast majority of the cases were new-onset occupational asthma (88 percent, n=506).

WRA was accounted for 65 cases (11 percent), and the remaining 441 cases were new onset occupational asthma. Work-aggravated asthma accounted for 61 cases (11 percent). An additional 11 cases met the case definition for work-related asthma, but were not classifiable.

Industry, occupation and exposures

Over half of all the WRA cases were employed in the service sector (n=296, 52 percent), mostly in the health care industry (n=168, 30 percent), followed by educational services.

Manufacturing accounted for one quarter of all cases (n=138, 24 percent) led by chemical manufacturing and miscellaneous manufacturing. Public administration employed another nine percent, followed by the retail and wholesale trade industries. Construction accounted for only four percent.

SENSOR staff record up to three exposures per person that trigger his or her asthma. In many of the cases the specific agent of concern was unidentified. The most frequently reported exposures included indoor air pollutants; dusts and fibers; cleaning products; mold; and solvents.

Specific agents identified included latex; isocyanates; smoke; and formaldehyde. Among the 65 RADS cases, cleaning products and unspecified chemicals were most frequently reported.

The impact

WRA can have very serious health and financial impacts on working adults. Eighty-eight percent of those with WRA still had breathing problems at the time of the interview and 23 percent reported their symptoms had become “more severe,” since their initial diagnosis. More than half reported one or more emergency room treatments for their asthma symptoms; and nearly one third of the cases reported multiple visits to the emergency department.

A total of 211 cases reported leaving the job that caused their breathing problems, including 19 cases who reported that they were fired because of their breathing problems.

Summary

It is well recognized that only a small proportion of WRA cases are reported to SENSOR and that findings may not be representative of the underlying incidence of WRA in the Massachusetts population. Interview response patterns also influence the findings reported here, which are based on the 57 percent (n=594) of all reported cases who consented to participate in telephone interviews. White-collar workers were more likely to respond than blue-collar workers and women were more likely to respond than men. Thus white collar workers and women are over-represented in the findings.

It is unlikely that the observed decline in reported cases over time reflects a true drop in incidence, but is more likely due to reduced reporting. It has been suggested that this decline may be due, in part, to the time and paperwork required in the face of ever increasing workloads. There has also been increased concern in recent years about patient confidentiality.

Health care providers are reminded that reporting cases of WRA to the Massachusetts DPH is NOT a violation of the Health Insurance Portability and Accountability Act (HIPAA) because Massachusetts regulations require reporting of this condition. HIPAA expressly “authorizes health care providers to disclose protected health information without permission of the individual, to MDPIF, the public health authority authorized to receive it.”

*The Occupational Lung Disease Bulletin is published and circulated by the Massachusetts Department of Public Health; the National Institute for Occupational Safety and Health (NIOSH); and the Sentinel Event Notification System for Occupational Risks (SENSOR). ■

Employee safety at your health care facility

In early January, Reggie Redfern, a retired police chief from Easthampton, called the MNA and asked if he could reprint an article from the April 2005 edition of the Massachusetts Nurse about an emergency room nurse who was assaulted at work. Redfern was interested in it because of his involvement as an educator with hospital security and police departments.

Workplace violence and awareness

By Chief Reggie Redfern (Ret.), President, SRR Traffic Consulting

On Feb. 10, 2006, a nurse at Northwestern Memorial Hospital in Chicago was attacked by a male described as being in his 30s who tried to sexually assault her. The attack took place just before dawn in a public rest room within the hospital. The attacker had been hiding in one of the bathroom stalls and grabbed the nurse before she could break free and flee. Chicago police and hospital security personnel are investigating.

Workplace violence in hospitals and health care facilities is a major concern across the nation for those who are “in the trenches.” Nurses, doctors, clerical staff and security personnel face numerous challenges emanating from people from all walks of life, all levels of psychological well-being and at all times of the day and night. There was a time when hospitals, churches and schools were safe places, “hands-off” when it came to violence, but not any longer.

Clearly, any facility that has numerous rooms, storage places, entrances and exits, and ease of movement by staff and non-staff creates a challenge 24 hours a day. Proper handling of patients who become aggressive, threatening or dangerous requires specialized training to calm the disturbance while at the same time applying the proper force necessary to overcome the encounter. Add to this an individual preoccupied with sexually attacking another individual and it may literally become a fight for one’s life.

In any hospital, it is the nurses and security that fill shifts around the clock. They are the first line of defense for any facility when it comes to violence. Unfortunately, they are also the first ones to be viewed as “collateral damage” when someone is determined to disrupt a health care setting.

An area that needs special attention by medical facility personnel so that they do not fall into the category of collateral damage is where, and when, gang members are treated for wounds related to gang violence. With the influx of gangs and gang-related injuries, these individuals are regularly brought to emergency rooms throughout the country. By their very nature, gang members are accustomed to a violent lifestyle and the inside of a hospital. Even though the professionals there are concerned with the individual’s health and well-being, a hospital can become a gang member’s battleground.

Simple things in an emergency room such as dressing a cut, removing a necklace or a hat may be viewed as a sign of “disrespect” to an individual’s gang colors. Having members of two rival gangs in the same treatment area may bring about additional injuries to anyone present, including those who are trying to save a stranger’s life.

No place that the public has access to is totally safe. Attacks have happened in maternity wards where two rival gang members’ girlfriends had given birth; in cafeterias; and in admissions areas.

Awareness, through education, is the key to preventing incidents such as these from happening. Awareness of your surroundings applies to the incident in Chicago as well as it does to any hospital in the country. Because hospitals are open 24/7, awareness can save your life even if you are in a public rest room.

Redfern subsequently invited the MNA to attend a two-day conference that was being hosted by Cambridge Health Alliance and Youville Hospital on Feb. 9 and 10. As part of this conference, Redfern and retired Sgt. Louis Savelli brought participants through a world immersed in gang violence. It was a world that some of us had glimpsed before, but it was also one that we could never fully understand the way these two police instructors did.

Redfern and Savelli are doing is about showing what kind of impact this type of violence is having on our society at large. Health care workers may be at risk and placed in vulnerable situations when dealing with some of these offenders.

Gangs and the workplace

By Sgt. Louis Savelli (Ret.), NYPD President, Homefront Protective Group

A common misconception held by health care workers, security officers and law enforcement officers has led to a false sense of security. The misconception, simply stated, is that hospitals and health care facilities are neutral territory for gangs and other bad guys.

Many nurses get to work every day and ask if they could reprint an article from the March 2006 Massachusetts Nurse Page 11 about showing what kind of impact this type of violence is having on our society at large. Health care workers may be at risk and placed in vulnerable situations when dealing with some of these offenders.

Learning to recognize potential offenders’ cues and when to notify hospital security was a key element of the training, as this is how police and hospital security can most effectively diffuse or prevent a situation from occurring. Keeping with this theme, Redfern and Savelli submitted the following articles to help MNA members better understand the issue.

Fighting a silent epidemic: the Hepatitis C Coalition

As health professionals, you know the importance of access to reliable and quality services for addressing communicable diseases. We, at the Hepatitis C Coalition, are concerned with improving services for consumers with this often-symptom-less liver disease.

The Massachusetts Hepatitis C coalition brings together providers and consumers to work to increase awareness of Hepatitis C and support programs through education, advocacy and coalition building. With the help of nurses such as you, the coalition can take a more powerful stance in protecting the commonwealth from this unnecessary and preventable illness.

Virus can ‘hide’ for up to 30 years

Because a person can live 10, 20 or even 30 years without knowing the hepatitis C virus is in their body, much damage can be done during that time and a person can transmit the disease to others. Due to insufficient awareness during that time and a person can transmit the hepatitis C virus (HCV) to others unknowingly. It impairs 500 bodily functions such as digestion, metabolism, hormones and detoxification.

Hepatitis C may not show symptoms for many years. As a result, this infectious disease may be transmitted unknowingly. It impairs 500 bodily functions such as digestion, metabolism, hormones and detoxification.

The problem

It is estimated that over 100,000 people in Massachusetts are living with hepatitis C. In 2004, 10,127 people were newly diagnosed. According to the Department of Public Health, 10,127 newly diagnosed cases of hepatitis C were reported to the Massachusetts Department of Public Health. And with severe budget cuts to public health since 2003, services for infected people have sharply decreased.

The coalition knows the challenges we as a health-oriented organization face. But, with increased access to clean syringes, the incidence of hepatitis C will decrease. This is certain as 80-90 percent of all IV drug users are infected with hepatitis C due to sharing dirty needles.

How can you help

- Commit to the Hepatitis C Coalition your support in funding hepatitis C programs at $2,505,000 in FY07.
- Communicate this support and budget priority to Chairman of the House Committee on Ways and Means, Rep. Robert DeLeo, State House, Room 243, Boston, MA 02133. 617-722-2590.
- Fund hepatitis C programs (state budget line item 4513-1114) in the fiscal year 2007 state budget. A new fact sheet has been developed and we are scheduling meetings with legislators to share our stories and the importance of increasing funds for hepatitis C programs within the Department of Public Health. If you would like to meet with your own representative or senator to talk about hepatitis C funding, please contact Jenny Nathans at the coalition for materials and more information.

National data on hepatitis C

Groups at risk

Those who are infected with hepatitis C are often those least able to get adequate care:
- 80-90 percent of those incarcerated are infected
- 15-30 percent of those infected with HIV
- 22 percent of the homeless
- 15 percent of those incarcerated
- 7 percent of veterans
- 3 percent of health care workers

Projected societal costs, 2010-2019

- $193.1 billion hepatitis C-related deaths.
- $10.7 billion in direct medical expenditures.
- $21.3 billion and $54.2 billion in indirect costs, respectively, from premature disability and mortality in people under 65 years of age.

Background

Hepatitis C is a life-threatening, viral illness that is transmitted through blood-to-blood contact by the hepatitis C virus (HCV). The problem

It is estimated that over 100,000 people in Massachusetts are living with hepatitis C. In 2004, 10,127 people were newly diagnosed, according to the Department of Public Health. Between 1994 and 2004, reported cases increased by 663 percent in the commonwealth.

In 2003, approximately 12,000 people in the United States died from HCV. The CDC projects that by the end of the decade hepatitis C will kill more people in the US than AIDS.

Funding for hepatitis C programs in the commonwealth has been cut by 80 percent since FY02, leading to unnecessary and preventable illness. In FY05, the funding level was $562,876 and in FY04 there was no separate line item for hepatitis C. It was nested within HIV. In FY07, the governor has level funded it at $562,876.

A Solution

Fund hepatitis C programs (state budget line item 4513-1114) at $2,505,000 in FY07. Make it possible for the Department of Public Health to address hepatitis C aggressively through:
- Increasing State Laboratory services that test for the presence and status of a disease in a patient.
- Expanding counseling and testing services at community health centers for all hepatitis C patients.
- Standardized educational and training efforts for health care and social service providers and the general public.
- Quality, regional case management services for all infected people.
- Improved surveillance of hepatitis C to assess state needs.

How you can help

- Communicate this support and budget priority to Chairman of the House Committee on Ways and Means, Rep. Robert DeLeo, State House, Room 243, Boston, MA 02133. 617-722-2590.

- The forced use of benefit time during leaves of absence, versus an RN having the ability to choose whether or not to use benefit time or to take an unpaid leave.
- An end to the practice of benefit time being calculated towards overtime.
- The gutting of language specific to “reduction in force” (RIF), resulting in the weakening of the protections given to senior nurses if jobs are cut.

In addition to these proposals, hospital management is also asking MNA members to accept what union reps say is language that aims to destroy the future of nursing at UMass. Specifically, these proposals would provide key benefits to senior nurses while newly-hired nurses would not be eligible for the same benefits:

- Senior RNs will continue to receive “traditional benefit time,” while new RNs will get “earned benefit time”—resulting in a huge disadvantage in how new RNs accrue time off.
- Contributions to senior RNs’ defined benefit pension plans will be frozen, and new RNs will only be eligible to participate in a defined contribution plan (i.e., there will not be any hospital-sponsored pension plan in place for new hires).
- A weakening of maternity/FMLA policies—“These are just some of the proposals that management has presented so far,” said Logan. “Essentially they’ve decided that this negotiating committee is willing to sell out newly-hired RNs. We will never agree to that. We will not sell out our profession by hurting the nurses who will follow us.”

New management, new problems

According to union leaders at UMass Memorial University Campus, there have been two major changes that have influenced the current stalemate in contract talks: new expansions and new management.

The hospital is currently in the midst of what it calls its “Lakeside expansion project,” which includes the merging of UMass’ SACU (a unit focused on day-surgery recoveries) with its PACU (the recovery room for the main operating room). The MNA voiced its concerns about this matter during negotiation sessions that were held specific to the expansion process—but management wouldn’t budge. Instead, it insisted that the units would be merged and would operate with only one staff.

“Unfortunately, we have just witnessed a RIF because of this merger,” said Judy Locke, vice chairman of the bargaining unit and a RN in the SACU. “We argued against this for a number of months, but management insisted that the SACU and PACU had to become one unit with one staff.”

Locke added that, in reality, the SACU and PACU will co-exist physically once moved to the new Lakeside area, but they will continue to function independently as separate sub-unit areas with defined staff attending. “We repeatedly asked why they couldn’t bring both units over into the new area intact and let them continue to function, each with their own staff. But ultimately management went ahead with its poorly laid plans and, as a result, the SACU nurses were forced into a RIF situation that affected 30 people.”

The January 2005 arrival of Sharon Hylka, a vice president from the Memorial Campus, led to the reversal of a 13-year-old practice that benefited both the hospital and nurses. Historically, the day-shift OR nurses had used their incidental time (changing time) at the end of their shifts to ensure that the first patients of the day were prepped and ready for their 7 a.m. surgeries—an arrangement that worked for everyone involved.

But in January 2005, Hylka changed the arrangement and, as a result, the nurses were denied their use of work time to change into scrubs, even though the practice is protected under state law. Various attempts by the MNA to resolve this issue have been made, but the hospital still refuses to pay the incidental time it owes the nurses.

Management, and Hylka in particular, have also invested a considerable amount of time in attacking Locke and other RNs who are union activists. From denying nurses their rightful benefit time to unjust disciplinary actions, management’s modus operandi has been fraught with anti-union efforts and Locke has filed an unfair labor practice with the NLRB as a result.

In the black, but still under attack

One of the most shocking components of the nurses’ struggle to achieve a fair contract is that UMass Medical Center had a budgetary surplus of $94.3 million in fiscal year 2005—yet management is still determined to decimate the very thing that is most essential in patient care: nursing.

In a Dec. 21 memo to hospital staff announcing the windfall, John O’Brien, president and CEO, wrote that UMass Memorial would continue to be focused on “creating an outstanding patient experience, becoming the workplace of choice … and serving (the) community.”

“A hospital is an institution of nursing care,” said Locke, “so Mr. O’Brien’s goals cannot possibly be met without that nursing care in place … which makes us wonder why management is attacking us when they should be thanking us for our contributions, our skills and our dedication.”

“To say that the MNA bargaining unit is angry over these issues is an understatement,” said Logan. “A newsletter is being distributed after each negotiating session to keep every member informed of what’s happening. We expect that action will be required of the bargaining unit in order to stem this attack on our rights and entitlements.”

The union’s current contract is set to expire in April.

Scholarship funding available through the Massachusetts Nurses Foundation

Kate Maker Scholarship
This scholarship was established to honor the memory of Kate Maker, RN, a great leader and powerful activist. Kate’s primary focus as an activist was with the MNA. Kate was a long-time member of the MNA Board of Directors, and she served two terms as the chairman of her bargaining unit at UMass Memorial Health Care’s University Campus in Worcester. Kate participated in pickets and strikes for nurses at several Worcester-area hospitals and was particularly effective when it came to explaining the connections between safe-RN-staffing ratios and their immediate impact on patient safety.

The scholarship will be awarded to a student (entry level or practicing RN) who is pursuing an associate’s or bachelor’s degree in nursing. Preference will be given to students living and/or working in the Worcester area first, and then to other areas of MNA Regional Council 2. If the applicant is a practicing RN who is pursuing a bachelor’s degree, she/he must be an MNA member.

Janet Dunphy Scholarship
Founded by a scholarship established by Regional Council 5, these scholarships are given annually to an MNA member in good standing in Regional Council 5 and who is pursuing a B.S., M.S. or doctoral degree. Second preference will be given to those seeking advanced degrees in public health policy or labor relations at any level. If the applicant is an MNA member in an active bargaining unit, an additional reference is required from your local unit representative/committee member attesting to distinguished service within your local unit. Anyone who is known to have crossed a picket line cannot be considered.

Regional Council 5 Scholarship
(Child of member in nursing program under age 21) Funded by Regional Council 5, these scholarships will be awarded to a child of an MNA member in good standing from Regional Council 5 who is enrolled in an NLN accredited program in nursing.

Labor Relations Scholarship
Two scholarships are funded annually by a grant established by the MNA Division of Labor. The scholarships are for an RN or health care professional who is also an MNA member in good standing. Applicants must also be enrolled in a bachelor’s or master’s degree program in nursing, labor relations or related field. Additional reference is required from your local unit representative identifying your involvement in labor relation/collective bargaining activities.

The Massachusetts Nurses Association joins MITSS in providing support to nurses involved with an adverse medical event.

“To Support Healing & Restore Hope”

Program Mission/Philosophy
• We believe that nurses have a professional responsibility to support colleagues who have been affected by unexplained medical outcomes or adverse patient events.
• We believe that early support can lessen the emotional effects on the nurse clinician provider.
• Are you a nurse who has been impacted emotionally by an experience associated with an adverse medical outcome?
• Would you like to talk confidentially to a MITSS therapist?
• Would you like to join in a peer-led support group?
• Would you like to join or participate in a structured support group led by an experienced psychologist?

Medically Induced Trauma Support Services (MITSS), Inc. is a non-profit organization that supports, educates, trains, and offers assistance to individuals affected by medically induced trauma.

MITSS supports clinicians using the following resources:
• One-on-one interaction via phone
• Group sessions led by a professional facilitator
• Training for fellow survivors who would like to help others

Friends,
Have you ever found yourself getting ready to file for bankruptcy because you can't pay your kid's hospital bill, and then you say to yourself, “Boy, I sure would like to be in Michael Moore's health care movie”?

Or, after being turned down for the third time by your HMO for an operation they should be paying for, do you ever think to yourself, “Now THIS travesty should be in that movie?”

Or maybe you've just been told that your father is going to have to just, well, die because he can't afford the drugs he needs to get better—and it's then that you say, “Damn, what did I do with Michael Moore's home number?”

OK, here's your chance. As you can imagine, we've got the goods on these crooks. All we need now is to put a few of you in the movie and let the world see what the greatest country ever in the history of the universe does to its own people, simply because they have the misfortune of getting sick. Because getting sick, unless you are rich, is a crime—a crime for which you must pay, sometimes with your own life.

About four hundred years from now, historians will look back at us like we were some sort of barbarians, but for now we're just the laughing stock of the Western world.

So, if you'd like me to know what you've been through with your insurance company, or what it's been like to have no insurance at all, or how the hospitals and doctors wouldn't treat you (or if they did, how they sent you into poverty trying to pay their crazy bills) … if you have been abused in any way by this sick, greedy, grubby system and it has caused you or your loved ones great sorrow and pain, let me know.

Send me a short, factual account of what has happened to you—and what IS happening to you right now if you have been unable to get the health care you need. Send it to michael@michaelmoore.com. I will read every single one of them (even if I can't respond to or help everyone, I will be able to bring to light a few of your stories).

Thank you in advance for sharing them with me and trusting me to try and do something about a very corrupt system that simply has to go.

Oh, and if you happen to work for an HMO or a pharmaceutical company or a profit-making hospital and you have simply seen too much abuse of your fellow human beings and can't take it any longer—and you would like the truth to be told—please write me at michael@michaelmoore.com. I will protect your privacy and I will tell the world what you are unable to tell. I am looking for a few heroes with a conscience. I know you are out there.

Thank you, all of you, for your help and your continued support through the years. I promise you that with this “Sicko” we will do our best to give you not only a great movie, but a chance to bring down this evil empire, once and for all.

In the meantime, stay well. I hear fruits and vegetables help.

Yours, Michael Moore
