Baystate Visiting Nurses rally and picket in Greenfield

Patient safety threatened by lack of contract

The registered nurses who work for the Baystate Visiting Nurses and Hospice, Greenfield office held a well-attended picket and rally on Greenfield Common last month to draw public attention to their stalled contract talks with Baystate management. The nurses were joined by a number of supporters and other union leaders and their walk on the common drew an impressive amount of community attention.

Three years ago, when the Franklin Medical Center (FMC) affiliated with Baystate Medical Center, the FMC hospice and visiting nurses were removed from FMC and put under a new organization. Because of this change, the nurses set up a separate bargaining unit with the MNA and began negotiating a contract.

“After two years at the table we still don’t have a comprehensive offer from management. They seem content to drag their heels and let the negotiations for this ‘first’ contract go on forever,” said Diane Morrisey, RN. “I have been delivering quality home health care to patients in this community for many years. I must say that the way we are being treated by Baystate is an insult to me, my fellow nurses and, most importantly, our patients.”

While both sides remain far apart, the nurses view the primary problem as being Baystate’s insistence that the nurses in Greenfield settle for a contract similar to a contract in Springfield but not nearly as beneficial as the contract they worked under at FMC. In essence, management is asking the RNs to do the same work for less benefits and compensation. Among the reductions for the nurses

What to do when the Joint Commission visits your facility

The Joint Commission on the Accreditation of Hospitals (JCAHO) on-site survey process has changed to an unannounced survey. This means that your hospital receives no advanced notice of a Joint Commission survey date.

Since hospitals are surveyed every three years, the first unannounced survey will occur sometime during the year that the hospital’s survey is due, between Jan. 1 and Dec. 31. After the first unannounced hospital survey, a survey can occur at any time between 18 and 39 months after the previous unannounced survey.

Most hospitals in Massachusetts fall under the first unannounced survey criteria.

You have a right as a hospital employee to request a meeting with the Joint Commission surveyor team to discuss issues of patient safety and care delivery.

In order to use this right you must write a letter to nursing administration at your hospital and request a meeting with the Joint Commission team long before they arrive for the unannounced survey. If the Joint Commission

Safe staffing bill: A progress report

What was the compromise?

In negotiations with House leadership, the MNA agreed to change the bill so that the Department of Public Health would set nurse-patient ratios, as opposed to having those ratios written directly into the legislation. Under the original bill, DPH would have been empowered to determine how limits would be enforced, so the agency was always going to have the final say on how the legislation was implemented. For this reason, we feel that the compromise language will achieve our goals. Furthermore, we have gained enormous ground politically with this compromise. Our own polling tells us that while the public overwhelmingly supports limits, they want them to be set by health professionals, not politicians. Placing the job in DPH’s hands is supported by the public and was directly responsible for the overwhelming House vote in support of the measure.

What happens now?

Legislative action does not carry over from one two-year session to another. Thus, we must repeat some of the process. The bill was filed again this year by Rep. Christine Canavan (D-Brockton) as House Bill 2059.

Nurses’ guide to single-payer reform

Introduction by Sandy Eaton, RN

Last month, the MNA had the great honor of hosting students from the Harvard Trade Union Program. It was an amazing evening, especially since the class included a contingent of dedicated labor and healthcare activists from across the continent—including the president of the British Columbia Nurses Union.

That got me thinking: wouldn’t it be great to “introduce” my fellow MNA members to nurses from other countries who are working, like us, to protect and improve what they have in terms of health care rights? What I discovered was that introducing you to Kathleen Connors, the immediate past president of the Canadian Federation of Nurses Unions, was the best way to move ahead in my efforts to “go global” on the newsletter’s single-payer page.

Connors is now giving leadership to coalition efforts to stave off the Americanization of Canadian Medicare. Here is what she had to say in a very key—and very impressive—interview with the Labor Party Press back in 1998.

A conversation with the president of Canada’s nurses federation

In Canada, everyone has a health care card. And if you need to visit a physician, or get tests, or if you have to enter a hospital, your access to the system is through that card. You present it, and that’s it. There are no questionnaires; there are no insurance forms—you’re just “in.”

One of the issues that is so foreign to Canadians is the idea that your plan wouldn’t cover this or that. Here you have access to everything that is deemed medically necessary.

Every Canadian has access to the health-care system—whether you have the money or not, whether you have a job or not. In the U.S., people stay in terrible jobs because they have health insurance. That doesn’t happen here.

Now, if I don’t like the shape of my nose, I might have to pay for that. Unless my nose was broken in an injury—and then it would be covered. If I’m diabetic and I become ill, I won’t be denied care because I have a pre-existing condition. And everybody here is entitled to preventive care. If you have a nagging kind of concern, you have access to your doctor to discuss it.

The financing for the health care system in Canada is through both the federal and provincial governments. The money comes out of general tax revenues, which are fairly progressive. Business pays its fair share. In addition, some provinces have an employer health tax. There has been research that shows that what Canadians pay in taxes to finance health care is not dissimilar to what you Americans pay for health care. You pay for health care with out-of-pocket expenses and through foregone wages that were used to pay your health insurance premium. We just pay for it a different way.

Under Canada’s Constitution, the issue of health care is a matter of provincial jurisdiction. But over the years, there has been federal involvement in financing health care and establishing the standards that the provinces have to meet in order to get the federal money. The overarching piece of legislation that governs health care in Canada is very simple: it’s called the Canada Health Act. In it, there are five principles set out upon which the health care system.

These principles are very simple. They are: universality, meaning that all Canadians have to be covered; comprehensiveness, meaning that there has to be a comprehensive range of services available; accessibility, meaning that there has to be reasonable access to medically necessary care; portability, meaning that if you go from one part of the country to the other, your health insurance goes with you; and that it must be publicly administered and not-for-profit.

Now, there are private hospitals here, but they are totally funded by the public dollars. So they have to meet the terms set by the Canada Health Act and by the province.

For the provinces to get the money from the federal government for their health care budget, they must be accountable to the federal government. For instance, we had some problems with doctors doing extra billing to supplement their incomes. Under the Canada Health Act, for every dollar that was extra-billed, the federal government withheld a dollar of the province’s allocation. So it’s a carrot-and-stick approach to eliminate extra billing and user fees. And it’s worked.

There are problems. There is heavy pressure coming from the corporate sector to get into the health care business. And because governments are looking at how much is spent on health care, they try to ratchet down the amount of spending. And there are calls in some parts of our country for a private system to complement the public one.

You can purchase private insurance here. And so if governments decide to cut the amount of services that are covered, the private companies are here to pick up the slack. We [Canadian nurses] have a problem with this, because it puts in place the beginnings of a two-tier system where people with money get extra service, and everybody else waits.

“Accessibility” under our system doesn’t mean that you have to have a brain scan or an MRI in every little town. You might have to go to where the services are. I sometimes hear Americans criticizing our system, saying there is a shortage of tests, or there is only one MRI in this city. But I think one MRI, utilized properly, can be as effective as three or four.

One of our right-wing think tanks recently produced a survey on waiting lists for procedures here. It was very unscientific, based on anecdotal testimony from doctors. But the bottom line is, if your physician says that it’s medically safe for you to wait, you may go on a waiting list. But if your health status is compromised by your condition, you will have the surgery and you will get the tests—without a wait. Some people are on waiting lists because they only want Dr. Jones to do the surgery. We do have our choice of doctors here—if you’re not happy with one, you can go see another. It’s not like what you have in some of your HMOs.

It’s not inherent in the structure of our system that there are waiting lists, it’s that we have chosen to only allocate a certain amount of money for our health care system (the Canadian government spends much less on healthcare than the US). And looking at the American system, you often don’t get on any list—you may never get the surgery or the tests if you don’t have money.

Nurses here have some of the same concerns as nurses in the US, unfortunately. We aren’t filling out insurance forms here or having treatment protocols second-guessed by health insurance companies. But we do have some of the same financial pressures here as you do. Governments have gone through cost-cutting, and there is a reduction in the amount of money available for health care spending. I think we spend 94 percent of our Gross Domestic Product on health care, compared to the 14 or 15 percent that the US spends. Because we have a single-payer system, we save a lot of money on health care administration. And that allows us to do other things with the money.

Nurses have concerns about not being able to provide care in the way that we were educated to do. We have frustrations about being able to help patients with their physical needs, but not their emotional needs.

And unfortunately, because of our close proximity to the US, one approach some people have taken to the problems we have is to bring up American consultants to tell us how they did it there. The idea, for instance, of substituting lower paid health care workers for our RNs has entered our country.

The Canadian system isn’t perfect. But there are wonderful lessons to be learned, and you can modify them and make the changes you

Be a part of shaping the MNA’s agenda: consider running for election

By Beth Piknick
MNA President

In every sense, the MNA is a democratic, membership-driven organization. The agenda is set by our members for our members. The quality of the work of the MNA is dependent upon broad-based participation by our members in the running of the organization.

This issue of the Massachusetts Nurse contains important information about the election process, including the policies and procedures for our elections, descriptions of all the offices and positions that are open, and a “consent to serve” form for candidates who want to run for specific positions. (See Pages 13 and 14 for the forms.)

If you’ve ever thought that the MNA could do things better, or should take on issues and policies that are new and different, this is your opportunity to participate in the process of making that happen. The health of any organization or democracy is evidenced by the degree of competition within its election process. Remember, democracy is a participatory sport. Please participate.

The MNA is a staff-nurse driven organization, representing nurses in a variety of areas of practice. Don’t fall prey to a belief that you are not “qualified” to serve in a leadership position. If you have a passion for your profession and a desire to make it better, you have all the qualifications you need to run for office in the MNA.

In making this statement, I am speaking from personal experience. I first decided to become involved in the MNA and to run for office many years ago, when I had never been involved in a professional association or a union—I didn’t even understand how they worked. All I knew was that I saw the nursing profession getting a raw deal, and that I wanted to work with other nurses who felt the same way and wanted to make it better. I took the leap and got involved, and it has been one of the most rewarding experiences of my life. I invite you to do the same.

You are the MNA, and the MNA needs you to become involved. Please review the information in this month’s issue and consider running for office, so that your vision for the profession can help shape the MNA’s future.

need to make it serve the American population. Our system is constantly evolving, as it should be.

But even with the problems, there are high levels of support for our health care system. If you ask Canadians—and polls have done this recently—what their number one concern is, it is having access to health care. There is reluctance on the part of Canadians to borrow from the American system. If you ask Canadians what makes us different from Americans, they say, ‘our health care system.’ Some people say there are more Canadians who believe Elvis Presley is alive than believe in the American health care system!

I find that how much understanding and appreciation you have of the Canadian system often depends on where you live in your country, and how close to the border you are. The citizens who live along the border often understand a fair bit about the system. But I’ve had some American nurses tell me, “There can’t be a system like that.” And I have to say, “There is, and I work in it!” It’s just so foreign.

Back in 1993 and 1994, when some Americans were campaigning for single-payer health care, I spent time speaking in US church basements and community meetings trying to demystify our system—and it worked. Where Canadians can explain the system, it really helps. But if you are just relying on ads you see from the health insurance industry and you don’t have any other base of information, it’s hard to say you want to move to another system.

I want to say that it’s very important to Canadians to have a sense that in the US there are people who are willing to fight for a similar kind of program. Because it’s hard to fight the pressure from transnational corporations alone, to feel those kind of threats. It’s hard to keep fighting to maintain and improve the kind of system we have here. So when we can see that there are groups and individuals who are working for the same principles we have here, that’s really important to us.

Nursing on Beacon Hill: Legislative Update

Subsequent to the filing deadline, the MNA’s lobbyists spent almost three months asking legislators to sign onto the bill as co-sponsors. Their efforts paid off, as the safe staffing bill gathered 80 co-sponsors. Given that the bill is vigorously opposed by the powerful hospital industry, this is a remarkable number of supporters.

We’ve listed the co-sponsors below. Look for your legislators on the list, and if they signed on please call them and thank them for their support. Call your state representative and state senator at 617-722-2000 and ask for them by name. If you don’t know who your legislators are, go to www.capwiz.com/mansnurses and click on “my elected officials.”

Nurses have been able to count on Gomes. During her tenure, she assisted in the formation of a nursing commission to investigate and report on matters affecting the practice of nursing and the delivery of health care services by nurses. She also supported and voted in favor of last year’s legislation to set safe limits on nurses’ patient assignments.

A host committee of MNA members—which included Beth Piknik, MNA president; Peggy Kilroy, Region 3 president; Stephanie Stevens, Region 3 vice president; Leslie Flynn, an RN from Harwich; Rosemary O’Brien, an RN from South Harwich; and Judy Rose, an RN from Harwich—wanted to thank Gomes for her work on these and other initiatives and, as a result, they arranged a celebratory reception that included great desserts, beverages and live entertainment. Their hard work created a relaxed and casual atmosphere where friends, constituents and colleagues could thank Gomes for her public service.

Gomes was also presented with a resolution by Rep. Sarah Peake, who has taken over the 4th Barnstable District seat. The resolution was signed by the Cape Cod delegation and recognizes her for her impressive work during her tenure at the Statehouse.

In a short speech prior to presenting Gomes with a thank-you plaque, Piknik said, “The measure of any society is in how well it takes care of those in need. In Shirley Gomes, our society and our community has benefited from her dedication and commitment to justice and fairness for those in need. Region 3 honors retiring Rep. Shirley Gomes

On the evening of Jan. 30, Region 3 hosted a reception for Rep. Shirley Gomes at the Region 3 office in Sandwich in honor of her hard work on and dedication to health care issues during her tenure as a state representative. Gomes recently retired from public service after dedicating more than 20 years to her community and to the people of Cape Cod—first as member of the Harwich Board of Selectman beginning in 1983, then as a member of the Harwich Board of Health and finally as a state representative where she had served the 4th Barnstable District for the last 12 years.

While at the Statehouse, Gomes served on the Joint Committee on Health Care and worked on bills and new laws that would provide prescription drug coverage for senior citizens and laws to regulate managed care. She was also a key supporter in preventing “drive-through divorce” back in 1999.

Gomes has been a champion for a number of issues that demonstrate her commitment to making life better for the elderly, the disabled and for all who need access to quality health care. Her legacy includes an act for early detection and reporting of birth defects, support for families of the disabled and the party for mental health benefits.

During her tenure, she assisted in the formation of a nursing commission to investigate and report on matters affecting the practice of nursing and the delivery of health care services by nurses. She also supported and voted in favor of last year’s legislation to set safe limits on nurses’ patient assignments.

A host committee of MNA members—which included Beth Piknik, MNA president; Peggy Kilroy, Region 3 president; Stephanie Stevens, Region 3 vice president; Leslie Flynn, an RN from Harwich; Rosemary O’Brien, an RN from South Harwich; and Judy Rose, an RN from Brewster—wanted to thank Gomes for her work on these and other initiatives and, as a result, they arranged a celebratory reception that included great desserts, beverages and live entertainment. would be:

- A wage offer with no step scale and a very small increase that reduces the current pay of some members.
- Cutting benefits that nurses now receive.

“Of primary importance to us is the ability of the agency to recruit and retain experienced nurses,” said RN Elaine Lemieux, a VNA nurse with many years of experience.

“Most of us have many years experience in this community and wish to continue serving this area, but with what management is presently offering us, we would be hard pressed to stay. This could have a very direct affect on the quality of health care in the upper Pioneer Valley. We feel great about the support we got today and the support we have received from both our patients and the community.”

The nurses will continue leafleting in downtown Greenfield on the weekends, as well as asking supporters to call president Ruth Odgren at Baystate Visiting Nurses in order to tell her to settle a fair and equitable contract.

The RNs who picketed in Greenfield let the community know where and how their skills are used.

The Public Health Committee will hold a public hearing on the bill, and both the Public Health and the Health Care Finance Committees must approve the bill again before the measure can be voted on by the full legislature. The House will take the bill up first, and our goal is to get action sooner than we did in the last session so as to reserve more time to work on the bill’s passage in the Senate.

What’s different this time?

- The bill filed is the product of negotiations lead by several powerful lawmakers. As a result, it deals fairly with a number of issues that had previously been delaying its movement forward.
- We have a new governor, Deval Patrick, who has control over DPH and has publicly stated his support for the compromise legislation. Our previous governor, Mitt Romney, was going to veto the bill, which would have required us to get a two-thirds override vote in both legislative chambers. We no longer face that hurdle.
- We will now have more time to work with the Senate. There are 40 senators, so we will be able to concentrate our efforts on a relatively small number of lawmakers.

Remember, the Massachusetts Nurses Association is you and the key to our success on safe staffing limits is YOU. In the coming months, we will be communicating with you at key points with specific requests for actions that you can take in order to help make safe staffing a reality in Massachusetts. We might ask you to send an e-mail, a letter or a postcard, call your legislator, or attend a rally to help win passage of this bill. If you would like to become part of local Nurse Action Team or if you just have a question, please contact the head of your bargaining unit or MNA headquarters at 781-821-4625 for more information.

Commission visit is expected during 2007, the letter needs to written as soon as possible. If the visit is expected in 2008, write the request for a meeting by the end of 2007.

Barbara Norton, RN and chairperson of the MNA bargaining unit at Brigham and Women’s Hospital, had a recent experience with the Joint Commission team. She followed the process outlined above—writing a letter to nursing administration requesting a meeting. She and her fellow nurses met with the team to discuss the nurse’s role in providing safe and productive experience for the nurses.

Contract language that builds the union

By Joe Twarog

The stronger that the union is in the workplace, then the better it is able to function and improve working conditions for all in the bargaining unit. The entire union contract is critical, but there are several contract clauses that focus on how the union operates within the work environment. These provide the foundation and structure for the union. They are often grouped together under an article entitled “Union Rights.” The following is a quick review of some key clauses.

1. Union security. This clause sets in place the type of “shop” that the facility is in terms of union membership. By far, the optimal type of shop is a “union shop.” This means that all members of the bargaining unit (those classifications stated in the “recognition clause” of the contract) as a condition of employment, have to join the union. In many contracts and in the public sector, an “agency shop” is often negotiated. This means that some bargaining unit members who chose not to become union members may opt instead to become agency fee payers. Agency fee payers generally have no rights or benefits of union membership, such as holding union office, serving as an MNA floor representative, sharing in the MNA benefits package, participating in union surveys and voting in contract ratifications (private sector only). The union however, regardless of an employee’s union or non-union status, is obligated under the law to represent all employees in the bargaining unit for collective bargaining purposes and in grievances and arbitrations.

2. Union access. In order for the union to be an effective representation advocate for the employees, there must be good “union access” language in the contract. This simply allows the staff representative (associate director) the ability to visit the premises, to communicate with union members and to conduct union business.

3. Union bulletin board. Every union facility should have contract language that allows for a bulletin board for union purposes including notices, announcements, information and general communication. Ideally, the bulletin board is located in a place where most of the bargaining unit employees can view it with ease. It should not be located in the vicinity of the personnel office however. Such a bulletin board is just another way for union members to stay informed. It is not unusual for a contract to allow for multiple union bulletin boards throughout the facility.

4. Union orientation. It is the duty of the union itself to inform new employees about the MNA and the union contract. Union orientation language provides for some designated time when a union officer or designee can speak with the new employee about the benefits of the union. This union orientation is often piggy-backed onto the facility’s orientation. This is a great opportunity to introduce new employees to the MNA and to have the union operate at that workplace. This would include a review of the contract, the officers, the floor representatives, current issues, union meeting times, etc. Preferably the union orientation should be included during the facility orientation, and not simply tagged onto the end when people are tired and anxious to leave.

5. Union leave. An article that is too often overlooked is one called union leave. This article allows a union member to take a leave of absence from the workplace in order to conduct union work. Such work may be to serve as an officer or to work for the union itself. The time frame may vary widely, from several months to years in duration, depending on what is negotiated. Such contract language allows for an employee to take time off from work without fear of losing one’s employment position.

6. Provision of information. Under the collective bargaining laws (the National Labor Relations Act or Chapter 150(e)) the union is entitled to a wide array of information from the employer regarding working conditions, the facility and the employer to investigate and prepare for possible grievances and for bargaining. This therefore, need not be added as contract language, since the union already has those rights. But it is useful to have some language that addresses the regular provision of information on the status of the bargaining unit membership, including who is in the unit and who has taken a leave of absence and who has terminated employment. Such information should be updated regularly (monthly) and provided automatically.

7. Release time for floor representatives. Bargaining unit members who serve as Floor Representatives should be allowed paid time off to investigate, process, and handle grievances. This can be specifically stipulated in a contract clause. It is not advisable to limit the number of MNA floor representatives at the facility in the contract, since that is an internal union matter and therefore a permissive issue of bargaining. The issue of paid release time may be considered a mandatory issue of bargaining, (see Massachusetts Nurse, January/February 2005 issue).

8. Paid release time for union negotiators. A similar article is one that provides for paid release time for union members who are part of the negotiating committee be given paid release time to participate in contract negotiations. Contract talks can take many hours, days, weeks and months over time, and the dedication of those who serve on the committee should not be penalized by forcing them to take their own personal and vacation time for compensation.

9. Paid leave for labor conventions/conventions. Similar to contract clauses on paid leave for professional and clinical conferences, the union can negotiate clauses providing for paid time off work for labor events. These are often limited to the union officers and Floor Representatives, and may also be limited to the total number of days per year that can be used. Such language makes it much easier for MNA activists to attend such events as the Annual Chair Summit as well as the Labor Conference and Convention.

10. Use of facility for union business. Some contracts have clauses that allow for the union to hold union meetings on the facility premises, as well as providing space or a filing cabinet to hold union files and records, and even provisions for an on-site union office. However, the local union itself may have to debate and discuss the pros and cons of using such on-site facilities.

While these articles and clauses in themselves do not constitute a contract, they are critical for the efficient and effective operation of the union at the workplace. Often, the employer will fight having these included in the collective bargaining agreement since they recognize that these strengthen the union. The employer would often prefer to put as many roadblocks in the way of the union, and then at the same time criticize the union for not operating effectively.

Providence RNs approve agreement

Settlement includes improvements in pay, technology

After seven negotiation sessions, the MNA nurses at Providence Hospital in Holyoke recently approved a new three-year contract.

“We feel very good about this agreement,” said Diane Michael, RN and chair of the bargaining unit. “We got most of our important proposals recognized in the contract. This will allow us to have three more years of labor peace here at Providence. We are particularly satisfied with the outstanding language on technology that will allow for our input as new bedside technology is considered and implemented.”

The agreement includes extensive language that requires the MNA’s participation in and notification of any changes in technology that may potentially impact the RNs. This provision creates a joint labor/management technology committee. With representation on this committee, the MNA will participate in decisions about training and in the purchase and implementation of new technology.

Also under the new contract the union and management have agreed to make the staffing advisory committee more responsive to the staff nurses who file reports. Now this committee will review all unsafe staffing reports within seven days, and managers will report back to involved staff within 14 days.

The nurses will receive a 15 percent pay increase over the three years of the contract and will see improved compensation for night, evening and weekend work. The staff nurses are particularly pleased with the differential increases because they now are competitive with other area hospitals.

“We put a lot of time and energy into these negotiations,” added Michael. “In the end, we came away with very positive results for the nurses and the patients. Now it is time to get back to what we do best: providing quality care to our patients.”

"Your future and job prospects look both good and bad...I see you being hired, but by a non-union shop with a bad HMO."
The 125 registered nurses of Tobey Hospital in Wareham are working with a federal mediator in an attempt to break the logjam in negotiations for a new three-year contract that has stalemated over the hospital’s refusal to correct inequities in the placement of nurses on the agreed salary scale; below market differentials paid to nurses working on-call and on the night shift; and the hospital’s refusal to establish differentials recognizing the level of professional education achieved by nurses.

“At a time when the Southcoast Hospitals Group, which owns Tobey Hospital, is recently ratified a new three-year contract at several other North Shore hospitals, it is particularly difficult for our nurses—Southcoast is doing everything it can to show they don’t value or respect the nursing staff at Tobey, particularly very experienced, highly skilled nurses who have given years of service to the hospital,” said Sharon Barsano, RN in the intensive care unit and chair of the nurses’ local bargaining unit.

“The key issue in dispute has to do with making sure that nurses are getting paid based on their years of experience. Nurses who have been hired in recent years have been put in a lower step on their first day on the job, even for nurses with many years of experience who worked at Tobey for many years, and who agreed to salary freezes when Tobey was in trouble financially, now find that they are being paid less than new hires who have the same experience. We are trying to correct this inequity.”

The parties began negotiations on Sept. 29, 2006 and, to date, nine bargaining sessions have been held. The contract officially expired on Sept. 30, 2006, but has been extended by mutual consent of both parties through the end of March. The federal mediator has attended three meetings, with the next bargaining session scheduled for April 26.

Misplacement of RNs on salary scale

For years at Tobey Hospital, nurses have had a step salary scale in place. Nurses advance a step for each year of service. Nurses are supposed to automatically move up a step on the scale on the anniversary day of their year of hire. In 1992, 1996 and 1999 the nurses agreed to temporary freezes of the scale to help the hospital through rough financial periods.

As a result of these freezes, nurses hired in the late 1980s and through the 1990s have not kept pace in their step movements, and now find that nurses hired more recently have received appropriate credit for their years of experience at other hospitals and now are at a higher step than their peers who have the same years of experience at Tobey. One nurse hired in 1986 is still three years away from reaching top pay in the salary schedule, resulting in a loss of pay of $4.75 per hour ($9,808 per year).

In response to an MNA request, Southcoast responded that it does not have a written policy regarding step placement, but “per policy, step placement is determined after a review of a nurse’s years of related experience and of ‘internal equity’ considerations.” The MNA has determined that there is no ‘internal equity’ and is committed to rectifying this unfairness in an objective, transparent manner.

“This is about equal pay for equal experience,” said Barsano. “It’s also about the hospital correcting the inequities for the Tobey nurses who have provided years of dedicated service to patients.”

How widespread is the problem?

The MNA originally identified 16 nurses who were not on the pay step that corresponds to their nursing experience. Judy Daly, a respected medical/surgical nurse, was part of this initial group. She is a past recipient of the President’s Award for Excellence for going above and beyond in her role as a staff nurse. The hospital reviewed her rate of pay and determined that she had not received a step that was due for her in 2000. While advancing her one step in February, the hospital took the position that it was Ms. Daly’s fault for not informing them that her pay was incorrect.

In a letter to the hospital, Daly stated, “I am not seeking to place blame, nor however will I accept being blamed. I am worth every penny that Southcoast has paid me, and every penny that they haven’t.”

This hospital has refused to negotiate about Daly. Every nurse works hard to deliver the highest quality patient care. If nurses make a mistake, they are held accountable. Why wouldn’t Southcoast take responsibility for its mistake and be held to the same level of accountability?

The union has since asked for a complete list of all remaining nurses to see just how many have been shortchanged.

Below market differentials

In addition to pay inequities for nurses, the hospital also provides below-market differentials for nurses who work the night shift and for those who agree to be on-call. For example, nurses on the night shift were paid a shift differential of $4.50 per hour, while other hospitals in the areas, such as Jordan Hospital, pay $5 per hour. Tobey nurses on call are paid $3 for the hours they are on call, while Jordan pays $4 per hour.

“Recruiting for the night shift is particularly difficult, and paying a competitive differential is essential in order for our hospital to staff adequately around-the-clock to provide the care our patients deserve,” Barsano said.

Nurses with advanced degrees

In an attempt to boost its reputation as a high quality health care provider, the Southcoast Hospitals Group is seeking what is known as “Magnet” status, which is a special credentialing program that grants what amounts to a “Good Housekeeping Seal of Approval” for its nursing program and its treatment of nurses. One of the tenets of achieving Magnet status is the need to reward and develop a highly educated nursing staff. However, the treatment of nurses at Tobey is evidence that the hospital is not representative of a facility that values or respects its nurses.

Among the issues in dispute in the negotiations is the hospital’s refusal to pay a degree differential for nurses who achieve either a bachelor’s or master’s degree in nursing. The hospital has also refused to pay a certification differential, which involves intensive work in a specialty that enhances the practice of a nurse in providing quality care. Tobey used to pay these differentials, but discontinued the payments six years ago due to fiscal constraints. Such rewards for higher education and certification in nursing are common in hospitals in Massachusetts, including many MNA-represented facilities and Magnet-designated hospitals.

“How can you say you value the best in nursing when you won’t take common steps to reward and encourage professional development of your staff,” Barsano said.

The nurses hope the presence of a federal mediator will move the talks forward and help reach a fair and equitable resolution to the current dispute. If not, the nurses plan to continue to reach out to the public for support in their effort.

“In this competitive environment for top nursing talent, it takes a real commitment by management to do what is necessary to keep their nurses happy and to entice new nurses to join the team,” Barsano concluded.

“We believe that the nurses provide excellent patient care at Tobey. It is in the best interest of all involved to be fair to the nurses.”

Bargaining unit updates

Mercy Hospital

The bargaining unit just won two grievances and several more are now in the pipeline. A very successful non-agreement luncheon was held in February. Copies of the new contract were distributed at this meeting. Elections have been held and new leadership is now in place.

Worcester School Nurses

The unionized school nurses in Worcester began negotiations for a successor agreement. Many issues are on the table.

VNA & Hospice of Cooley Dickinson

The bargaining unit continued to hold its regular monthly dinner meetings and held an in depth discussion focused on “knowing your contract” in preparation for upcoming negotiations.

West Springfield School Nurses

The West Springfield School Nurses have reached an agreement. This will be the nurses’ first contract with the MNA since leaving the Teamsters. More details will be in next month’s Massachusetts Nurse.

Working safely with hazardous drugs: Fluorouracil

As the MNA’s Congress on Health and Safety has been focusing on nurses’ exposures to hazardous drugs, the drug thalidomide was discussed. As a result of that discussion, it was decided to begin a column in the Massachusetts Nurse addressing hazardous drugs that are in use today and to provide information on their toxicity and safe handling methods.

By Thomas P. Fuller, ScD, CIH

Synergistic with 5-FU, adrucil, carzonal, efudex, fluoroblastin and others, fluorouracil is a hazardous drug belonging to the general group known as antimetabolites and is used to treat several types of cancer, including colon, head and neck cancers.

This chemotherapy agent has been used for about 40 years. Fluorouracil works by preventing cells from making DNA and RNA by interfering with the synthesis of nucleic acids, thus disrupting the growth of cancer cells. It is typically administered intravenously by short or continuous infusions, or by the intravenous push method. It is also given topically for about 40 years. Fluorouracil works by preventing cells from making DNA and RNA by interfering with the synthesis of nucleic acids, thus disrupting the growth of cancer cells. It is typically administered intravenously by short or continuous infusions, or by the intravenous push method. It is also given topically for approximately 20 minutes.

Side effects to patients taking this medication include sore mouth and taste change, diarrhea, gritty eyes and blurred vision, blood in stool or feces, hair loss, lowered resistance to infection, leukopenia, and infertility in both men and women. Some effects do not occur until months or years after treatment.

The International Agency for Research on Cancer has classified fluorouracil as a Group 3 agent defined as, “Not classifiable as to carcinogenicity to humans.” It is classified between Group 2B “possibly carcinogenic” and Group 4 “probably not carcinogenic.” The National Institute for Occupational Safety and Health has included it on its list of hazardous drugs.

Although the long-term affects from chronic exposures to this chemical in the workplace are somewhat undocumented due to the hazardous nature of the drug, several workplace precautions are recommended. Procedures for the safe use, storage, handling and disposal of fluorouracil should be written and followed. Workers should avoid all direct contact with the chemical and wear protective gloves, lab coats and face shields. Treatment rooms should have adequate ventilation and workers should follow good housekeeping practices. Any spills or personal contaminations should be cleaned up immediately.

As the health effects to an embryo or fetus could be potentially most drastic due to the mode of operation of the chemical on living tissue, serious consideration should be given to whether a pregnant worker or those trying to conceive should work with this drug. At a minimum, workplace controls should be in place and followed closely and environmental monitoring should be considered.

Some effects do not occur until months or years after treatment.

Honor your peers with a nomination for 2007 MNA awards

One of the greatest honors one can achieve is the recognition of one’s peers. In this fast-changing health care system in which nurses strive daily to carry out their duties to their patients, there is very little time for them to acknowledge their own professional accomplishments and those of their peers.

The MNA awards are established by the membership with the approval of the MNA Board of Directors. They offer all members an opportunity to recognize nurses who, by their commitment and outstanding achievements, have honored us all. These are often nurses and other individuals who accomplish extraordinary things and who challenge us all to achieve excellence.

Elaine Cooney Labor Relations Award: Recognizes a Labor Relations Program member who has made a significant contribution to the professional, economic and general welfare of nursing.

Judith Shindul Rothschild Leadership Award: Recognizes a member and nurse leader who speaks with a strong voice for the nursing community.

MNA Advocate for Nursing Award: Recognizes the contributions of an individual—who is not a nurse—to nurses and the nursing profession.

MNA Human Needs Service Award: Recognizes an individual who has performed outstanding services based on human need with respect for human dignity, unrestricted by consideration of nationality, race, creed, color or status.

MNA Image of the Professional Nurse Award: Recognizes a member who demonstrates outstanding leadership in enhancing the image of the professional nurse in the community.

MNA Nursing Education Award: Recognizes a nurse educator who has made significant contributions to professional nursing education, continuing education and/or staff development.

MNA Excellence in Nursing Practice Award: Recognizes a member who is a role model by contributing innovative, progressive ideas that serve to improve and enhance clinical nursing practice, including precepting students or new staff nurses.

MNA Research Award: Recognizes a member or group of members who have effectively conducted or utilize research in their practice.

Kathryn McGinn Cutler Advocate for Health & Safety Award: This award recognizes an individual or group that has performed outstanding service for the betterment of health and safety for the protection of nurses and other health care workers.

For detailed information on selection criteria and to receive a nomination packet, call Liz Chmielinski, MNA division of nursing, 781-830-5719 or toll free, 800-882-2056, x719. The nomination deadline is June 15, 2007.

Promoting emotional resilience for disaster and emergency incidents

By Ashley Pearson
Emergency Management Director, Massachusetts Department of Mental Health

The goal of this article is to assist local public health officials in promoting emotional resilience in their own towns or cities and to plan for the needs of specialized populations. It serves a brief guidance to 1) introduce the topic of emotional resilience; 2) frame the issues; and 3) give some “quick tips” on how public health can begin the process and include disaster behavioral health elements into local planning initiatives.

Building emotional resilience among residents is one of the recommended goals for municipalities when designing emergency plans and conducting preparedness. In the field of psychology, the term resilience is used to describe how people cope with stress and catastrophe. When used in the context of disasters, it describes how people can learn to mitigate the emotional impact. It is understood that every person who experiences a trauma or traumatic incident during his or her lifetime is affected by it. Research has shown that persons impacted by trauma have what are considered normal reactions to experiencing the incident. In order to diminish the long-term effects or lessen the severity of impact on community members, providing incident-appropriate crisis counseling, psychological first aid or mental health and substance abuse assessments are important service resources for emergency response.

Evidence informed work with individuals and communities that experience trauma show that normal reactions to trauma are such things as:
• Increased levels of anxiety and worry
• Heightened levels of fear and helplessness
• Shattered or reduced sense of safety
• Feelings of outrage and anger
• Physical symptoms when re-triggered by memories of the incident such as sweating, nausea and sleeplessness
• Feelings of sadness and grief
• Loss in belief of importance of life or religious beliefs
• Feelings of relief and guilt about surviving the incident, especially when others did not (SAMHSA)

Work with those affected by a disaster—survivors, family members, response workers and community members among others—shows that if the emotional effects are not mitigated, there is a risk people may experience a reduction in overall functioning. Affected individuals may experience reduced ability or inability to go back to work or school, suffer mental disorders (namely depression, anxiety disorders and PTSD), shattered or disrupted relationships or have difficulty rebuilding their lives. If communities prepare for, and make promoting resilience a component of emergency planning, they can have positive outcomes in assisting citizens in returning to normalcy faster and with less risk of developing emotional difficulties as a result of experiencing the trauma of a disaster incident.

Affected community members become their own population with special needs as a direct result of being part of the incident and will need individualized services. Local public health departments are tasked with determining what emotional support services are needed as part of a response to mitigate the adverse affects. Local public health, in collaboration with mental health experts, substance abuse and human service providers, can work to do the following:

1. Provide educational opportunities: Educate community members prior to an incident about the affects of trauma and ways they can protect themselves by becoming resilient. Some recommended preventative measures are to create personal and family emergency plans, practice on-going self-care and stress management techniques, and become involved in community emergency preparedness initiatives at the local level.

2. Build response capabilities: Local public health should determine what mental health, substance abuse and crisis counseling services are already available in the community for a response, pre-incident.

3. Plan: Participate in planning efforts to care for populations with specialized needs during disasters and determine which would be most vulnerable.

4. Survey: Determine who in the community will most likely need specialized services to assist them with their unique circum stances (i.e., learn the make-up of your population).

The reason that public health should develop a community-wide special population approach as part of preparedness and planning initiatives is to conduct a pre-incident assessment to mitigate risk. It is not easy to pre-determine which people, pre-incident, will need behavioral health services. This is because no method has been discovered which can accurately assess which people will need help. It is difficult to do this because it is nearly impossible to determine how all the variables of a particular disaster will affect each unique member of a community, although we can make some educated guesses.

It has often not proved accurate to inappropriately assume which persons or groups may need help post-disaster. Some affected individuals show amazing resilience against all expectations, whereas others may not. Such variation speaks to the importance of teaching methods of resilience across the community and ensuring outreach to populations, which may be most at risk.

Members of specialized populations can be individuals with pre-existing mental disorders, substance abuse, the deaf and hard of hearing, or the disabled. Working with populations with specialized needs can be particularly challenging, but is an initiative that needs to be addressed.

The work is challenging because existing research does not prove members of the traditionally categorized special populations do better or worse than citizens not assigned into these classification groups. Some data indicates that members of special populations, who have support systems in place, do better than individuals with no prior history of trauma or pre-existing condition. With this said, specific work can be done on the local level to generally prepare existing population groups in the community to build their resilience.

In terms of an overall public response, one strategy that can be developed for the community is a protocol for providing disaster behavioral health services door-to-door if members are sheltering in place. At the local level, a way to start this process and determine what might work best is to review which groups or individuals living in the community that are most at risk and vulnerable. These might be people identified as lacking adequate support systems, whose resources are already stressed, or have prior histories of trauma, emotional illness, substance abuse, or other disabling circumstances. In order to prepare for an emergency to create effective plans, local public health should not only collaborate with other providers of services and local emergency management, but should consider how to incorporate these groups with potential specialized needs in building resilience. Another key part of planning is to include members of populations with special needs into the planning process to solicit their input, including people with psychiatric disabilities.

Recognizing that all disasters are local, public health officials and their partners can work to develop strategies for populations who may need specialized services and to implement overall resilience education for the community. A multi-phase plan that includes working with both the general public as well as specialized populations serves to inoculate and build the resistance of the entire community. Providing educational material, including information that has already been pre-developed (MassSupport: www.mass.gov/tdsa/Substance Abuse and Mental Health Services Administration: http://www.nationalcenterforinteraction.net), to community mental health centers, doctors offices, and to school systems is another way to assist in building resilience. Training sessions on psychological first aid could be offered at community venues as well. Lastly, local public health can assist by ensuring a planning element for providing disaster behavioral health services are incorporated into your city or town’s overall all-hazards emergency plan.

A well-developed system does not need to be overly complex to be effective. The key to fostering resilience and a robust disaster behavioral health response is to engage in pre-planning, creating relationships with your existing service infrastructure and raise the level of knowledge the community has about emergency response and its emotional impact. It is also helpful to enlist your partners at the local, state and federal level who can assist you in the process. The goal of promoting emotional resilience is to build communities who are better prepared for emergency incidents and their traumatic impact.

Disaster behavioral health is used in Massachusetts to describe the collaboration by mental health and substance abuse specialists to provide effective services during and post-incident. ©

Congress on Nursing Practice to launch mentorship program

A mentorship program for MNA members will begin this fall. There will be two categories of programs: one for experienced nurses who want to become mentors and the other for nurses who want to be mentored.

The mentorship program was developed with three areas of concentration:
- Labor: which will provide entry involvement into union-based activities in the workplace
- Career: which will provide information on avenues for professional growth and advancement, including specialty areas, advanced education and certification
- Organizing/legislative initiatives: which will provide entry into legislative activities and/or statewide initiatives

Mentors will need to attend a three-hour workshop focused on specific aspects of mentorship. Break-out sessions for the three categories of mentorship also will be featured.

Interested members should fill out the form below and return it to the MNA. For questions, call the Division of Nursing at 781-821-4625.
